METTLE. n. f. [corrupted from metel, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]

1. Spirit; spiritiveness; courage.

What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?

He was quick mettle when he went to school. Shakespeare.

I had rather go with fir priest than fir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the seditions.

Howard's Edw. VI.

He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon.

'Tis more to guide than spur the muse's steed,

Refrain his fury, than provoke his speed;

The winged courier, like a generous horse,

Shows most true mettle when you check his course. Pope.

2. Substance: this at least should be metel.

Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,

Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puffed,

Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shakespeare.

METTLED. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and mettled dance

Saw you never. Benj. Johnson.

Nor would you find it easy to compose

The mettled reeds, when from their nostrils flows

The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.

METTLESOME. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery; courageous.

Their force differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse.

METTLESOMELY. adv. [from mettlesome.] With spiriteliness.

MEW. n. f. [mue, French.]

1. A cage; an inclosure; a place where any thing is confined.

Forth-coming from her darksome meu,

Where she all day did hide her hated hew. Fairy Queen.

And horribly mis-shapes with ugly fights,

Captiv'd eternally in iron meus,

And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shows. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Her lofty hand would of itself refuse

To touch the dainty needle or nice thread;

She hated chambers, closets, secret meus,

And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhead. Fairfax.

2. [Met, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.

Among the first fort we reckon coots, fanderlings, and meuets. Carew.

The vessel sticks, and shews her open'd side,

And on her shatter'd mast the meus in triumph ride. Dryden.

To Mew. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to inclose.

He in dark corners mew'd,

Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd. Hubbard.

Unto the bush her eye did sudden glance,

In which vain Braggadocio was mew'd,

And saw it stir. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Why should your fears, which, as they say, attend

The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up

Your tender kinsman. Shakespeare. King John.

Fair Hermia, question your desires;

Know of your youth, examine well your blood,

Whether if you yield not to your father's choice,

You can endure the livery of a nun;

For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,

To live a barren sister all your life,

Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon. Shakespeare.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,

While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakespeare.

Feign thou sick,

Closet mew'd in their sedans, for fear of air. Dryden's Juu.

It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company. Locke.

2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.

I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their ayries, mewings, culling, and renovation of their feathers. Warton.

MIC

The fun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,

And majesty defac'd the royal stamp. Gloucester.

Nine times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length

With travel weary, unsupplied with strength,

And with the burden of her womb oppress'd,

Sabeen fields afford her needful rest. Dryden.

3. [Miauler, French.] To cry as a cat.

Let Hercules himself do what he may,

The cat will mew, the dog will have his day. Shakespeare.

They are not improveable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew's Cyl.

To MEWL. v. n. [miauler, French.] To squall as a child.

The infant

Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms. Shakespeare.

Pyrenean mountains: every part of this shrub is acrid and pungent, and inflames the mouth and throat. Mill.

MEZZOTINTO. n. f. [Italian.] A kind of graving, so named as nearly resembling paint, the word importing half-painted:

it is done by beating the whole into asperity with a hammer, and then rubbing it down with a stone to the resemblance intended.

MEYNT. adv. Mingled. Obsolete.

The salt Medway, that trickling streams

Adown the dales of Kent,

Till with the elder brother Thames

His brackish waves be meint. Spenser's Pastoral.

MICASM. n. f. [from μικρός, iniquo, to infect.] Such particles or atoms as are supposed to arise from disordered, putrefying, or poisonous bodies, and to affect people at a distance.

The plague is a malignant fever, caused through pestilential micasm insinuating into the humoral and consistent parts of the body. Harvey on Consumption.

MICE, the plural of mouse.

Mice that mar the land. Sam. vi. 5.

MICHAELMAS. n. f. [Michael and mas.] The feast of the archangel Michael, celebrated on the twenty-ninth of September.

They compounded to furnish ten oxen after Michaelmas for thirty pounds price. Carew.

To MICHE. v. n. To be secret or covered; to lie hid.

Marry this is micching malice; it means mischief. Shakespeare.

MICHER. n. f. [from miche.] A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of fight; a hedge-creeper. Hammer.

Mic or Mick is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow.

How tenderly her tender hands between

In ivory cage she did the miche bind. Sidney.

Shall the blessed fun of heav'n prove a miche, and cat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked.

Shakespeare's Henry IV, p. i.

MICKLE. adj. [mice], Saxon.] Much; great. Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced mickle.

This reade is rife that oftentime

Great cumburs fall unsoft:

In humble dales is footing fast,

The trode is not so tickle,

And though one fall through headless halfe,

Yet is his mis not mickle. Spenser's Pastoral.

Many a little makes a mickle. Canterbury Remains.

If I to-day die with Frenchmens rage,

To-morrow I shall die with mickle age. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

O, mickle is the pow'rful grace, that lies

In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakespeare.

All this tract that fronts the falling sun,

A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,

Has in his charge. Milton.

MICROCOSM. n. f. [μικρός and κόσμος.] The little world.

Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.

You see this in the map of my microcosm. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

She to whom this world must itself refer,

As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;

She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st this,

Thou know'st how lame a creature this world is. Donne.

As in this our microcosm, the heart

Heat, spirit, motions gives to every part:

So Rome's victorious influence did disperse

All her own virtues through the universe. Denham.

Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and body natural may be compared to the body politic. Swift.

MICROGRAPHY. n. f. [μικρός and γραφία.] The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernable only with a microscope. 3

The

MID

The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter: a curious description and figure of the sting see in Mr. Hook's micrography. Grew's Microscop.

MICROSCOPE. n. f. [μικρός and σκοπία; microscope, Fr.]

An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.

If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscopes, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing, to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed; the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beet all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs. Bentley.

The critick eye, that microscope of wit,

Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad, b. iv.

MICROMETER. n. f. [μικρός and μέτρον; micrometre, French.]

An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.

MICROSCOPICAL. n. f. [from microscope.]

MICROSCOPICK. n. f. [from microscope.]

1. Made by a microscope.

Make microscopical observations of the figure and bulk of the constituent parts of all fluids. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. Affixed by a microscope.

Evading even the microscopical eye!

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson's Summer.

3. Resembling a microscope.

Why has not man a microscopical eye?

For this plain reason, Man is not a fly.

Say what the use, were finer opticks given,

'T inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.

MID. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch.]

1. Middle; equally between two extremes.

No more the mounting larks, while Daphne sings,

Shall, lifting in mid air, suspend their wings. Pope.

Ere the mid hour of night, from tent to tent,

Unweary'd, through th' numerous host he past. Rowe.

2. It is much used in composition.

MID-COURSE. n. f. [mid and course.] Middle of the way.

Why in the East

Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light,

More orient in yon western cloud, that draws

O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.

MID-DAY. n. f. [mid and day.] Noon; meridian.

Who shoots at the mid-day fun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush. Sidney, b. ii.

His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,

More dazzled and drove back his enemies,

Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces. Shakespeare.

Who have before, or shall write after thee,

Their works, though toughly labour'd, will be

Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,

Or early or late twilights to mid-day. Donne.

Did he not lead you through the mid-day fun,

And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow

In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison.

MIDDEST. superl. of mid, middest, midst.

Yet the stout fairy 'mongst the middest crowd,

Thought all their glory vain in knightly view. Fa. Qu.

MIDDLE. adj. [miese], Saxon.]

1. Equally distant from the two extremes.

The lowest virtues draw praise from the common people;

the middle virtues work in them astonishment; but of the highest virtues they have no sense. Bacon's Essays.

A middle station of life, within reach of those conveniences which the lower orders of mankind must necessarily want, and yet without embarrassment of greatness. Rogers.

To deliver all his fleet to the Romans, except ten middle- sized brigantines. Arbutnot on Colm.
